I get a number of people requesting that I review Lightroom and Photoshop. There is a reason why I do not do this at this time. I'm basically a hobbyist and not a professional photographer. If I did any sort of paid photography and photography that needed to be quite good, I would not use Lightroom, and would use Photoshop for the whole workflow. The reason I keep using lightroom as my goto application is mostly due to the ease of use and flexibility. I do digress though, I'm in the 2GB or RAM configuration, and can achieve almost a 1000+ images a day with basic editing as we all are affected by the memory cap now. I just wish they would put something for those of us who have more memory and go over 2G. Other than that I think that this has been a definite improvement. I do like the new Smart Look recipe menu. I've been doing that all along and the extra options are nice. Thanks for the positive feedback! My basic philosophy is to bring features to the application and let the users decide if they should go with the default option or make changes. I have been slowly introducing more AI features and other new features, and I intend to continue doing this. I fear that users who like the old "one click for all settings" style may not get into the more advanced features. However, I encourage experimentation and I'm happy to respond to user questions and concerns. It is nice of you to suggest two of the forums to showcase current Lightroom 5 development. I will definitely be posting these threads on the Adobe Community Forums (https://forums.adobe.com/community/lightroom).
